Structural basis of leukotriene B4 binding to the acetylcholine receptor channel.

The neuromuscular junction is a useful model for studying the function of leukotriene B₄ (LTB₄) and other lipid messengers in the nervous system. This study examines the structural basis for the interaction of LTB₄ with the nicotinic acetylcholine receptor channel (AChR). LTB₄ attenuated ACh-induced currents in the rat muscle-type AChR (M1) expressed in Xenopus laevis oocytes. The attenuation was mediated by a small molecule with an M1-AChR binding affinity of 2.5 μM. The structural basis for this interaction was investigated using M1 expressed in Sf9 cells. LTB₄ increased the rate of desensitization of the M1 channel in 2d92ce491b
